Read the passage below and answer the questions that follow

THE DOGS AND THE HUNTER

The hunter's surprise, the oldest dog spoke, "You sons of men are difficult to help," said the dog. "We could easily help you solve your problem"

"If there is any way in which you can help me, I promise that you will not regret it," said the hunter. "You know you can trust me. But I don't see how you can help."

"Well, if you promise to keep it a secret, we can change into human shapes and help you carry the meat as far as the town gates. Then you can fetch your wives to carry it home from there before it gets dark."

The hunt promised, and the dogs took the human shapes and helped him with the meat. Now you know how curious women are? The very first thing the hunter's wives wanted to know was, how he alone had managed to get all the meat from the forest to the town gates. He refused to tell them, and of course that made them more interested than ever. They continued to ask him, and the more he refused to tell them, the more curious they became, until they could hardly eat or sleep.

So, the youngest women thought of a plan. One she made a very tasty meal of pounded yam for the hunter, and gave him strong palm-wine with it. She went on pouring him more and more palm-wine until he became rather drunk and sleepy. Just as he was falling asleep, she tapped him gently on the shoulder, and asked how he had got all the meat to the gates. And the drunken and sleepy hunter told her.

Later the same evening, when she was sweeping, she came to where the oldest dog was lying. She hit him with the broom. "Lazy animals!" She said angrily. "They only sleep and eat and lie around all day, whereas if they wished they could take the better shape and help us with our housework! Get out of my way!"

The dog immediately knew what had happened. He called the other two, and they went away from the hunter's house. And although dogs have remained in the men's house till today, they have decided never again to change their shapes to help human beings.
